True or False

- 1) You can't underestimate the power of synergy—especially in your worship planning.
- 2) You stand in front of your people on Sunday mornings for one reason and one reason only: to connect God's truth to real life in a way that leads to radical transformation.
- 3) Never forget that you have the incredible privilege of cooperating with the one who charted the universe. Give him room and permission to map your preaching for his purposes, as you fulfill your obligation to be an excellent representation of his nature.
- 4) God will use your entire leadership team in the planning process, if you will let him.
- 5) You should create a system of accountability among staff, but is more lenient toward volunteers.
- 6) The importance of well-planned, intentional music in a worship service can't be underestimated; it is essential to helping your people connect with God and hear what he wants to say to them.
- 7) Pray together for Sunday. Don't forget that the true power of transformation on Sunday comes from God.
- 8) One of the primary causes of tension in this relationship is unarticulated and unmet expectations.
- 9) If you and I ever hope to reach the goals we have set for ourselves and our churches, we have to be open to evaluating the progress we are making—and we have to have a system in place to foster that evaluation.
- 10) Train yourself, your pastor/worship pastor, and any key staff members to take notes when something stands out both during and immediately following the service.
